Record heat pushed 2024 above 1.5°C global warming threshold

ERIC ROSTON January 10

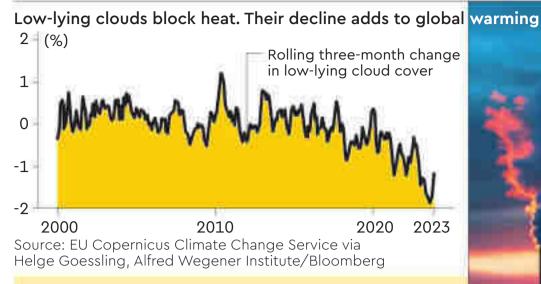

EARTH'S WARMING EXCEEDED 1.5 degrees Celsius on an annual basis for the first time in 2024, according to two major climate science agencies. It's the most potent evidence yet that countries are failing to meet a Paris Agreement goal of -1 limiting global heating to that level as a decades-long average. The amount of time left to avoid eclipsing the goal "is now wafer thin," said Colin Morice, a UK Met Office scientist.

Scientists sounded the alarm long before last year ended that 2024 would become the hottest year on record and almost certainly the first to surpass the 1.5C limit. Now both of those milestones have been confirmed in official statistical releases from two independent scientific agencies. The EU's Copernicus Climate Service measured the 2024 global average temperature to be 1.6C above the preindustrial average, and the UK Met Office to be 1.53C above it. The clear acceleration in rising temperatures has puzzled scientists, even as the evidence of the fast-warming atmosphere became impossible to miss.

The hottest day ever recorded happened on July 21, 2024 — a record that held until July 22. The planetary heatspike was made 2.5 times more likely by greenhouse gases, according to researchers. Typhoon Gaemi in Asia and Hurricanes Helene and Milton in the US, similarly juiced by climate change, killed hundreds of people and caused colossal damage. There was flooding across Africa's Sahel and in southeastern Spain; drought in southern Italy and the Amazon river basin; wildfires in central Chile: and landslides in northern India.

Hottest-year status puts 2024 in rarefied company. The tionally hot year. But scientists doubt those two factors are enough to account for the recent runup in warming. And they're debating whether this is a spiky blip in the record or the start of a more lasting acceleration.

The 'anti-hiatus'

For many experts, the mystery calls to mind the hotly debated "hiatus" in global temperatures from about 1998 to 2013, when temperatures seemed to plateau for a time. This prompted a deluge of studies in climate journals as well as public policy debates.

But it was ultimately misleading: Postmortems concluded that natural variability, including a string of La Niña years, and incomplete Arctic data buoyed an illusion. When temperatures began climbing upwards again in the mid-2010s, and once scientists updated their data sets, the hiatus dissolved into thin air.

With the current conundrum, call it the 'anti-hiatus', scientists can point to physical reasons that are likely contributing to the fast-rising heat. They just don't know yet which reasons are most important, or how long the trend will continue.

The global average temperature in 2023 reached 1.48C higher than the preindustrial average, according to the EU's Copernicus Climate Change Service. Greenhouse gas pollution and El Niño go a long way to explain that heat, about 1.23Cof it in 2023, some experts estimate, but there's more to account for. The sun entered the brighter part of its 11-year cycle, adding less than 0.03C. And a January, 2022 volcanic eruption in the southern Pacific shot enough of the ocean sky-ward to raise the stratosphere's heat-trapping water-vapour level by a record 10%.

Sulphur's cooling effect wanes

Sulphur aerosols released by power plants and vehicles have a cooling effect on the atmosphere, cancelling out as much as a third of humanity's heat-trapping emissions historically. When environmental rules cut sulfur, as acid-rain restrictions have done since the early 1990s, it comes with the perverse tradeoff of letting more heat break through to the planet's surface.

Since international shipping regulations requiring lowsulphur fuels went into effect in 2020, scientists have seen a 74% drop in related sulphur aerosol emissions. That benefits human health, even at the short-term cost of temporarily higher temperatures.

Scant clouds, more heat

Long-sought declines in sulphur aerosols may be contributing to more heat in an indirect way, too. These tiny specks encourage water vapor to condense into clouds. Since there are fewer of them in the air, that could be worsening conditions for cloud formation. That means less cloud cover, and that's a real problem.

Low-lying clouds reflect light back out to space, the way white polarice caps do. They're a part of the Earth's albedo, or surface brightness. Sparser low clouds mean more heat hitting us where we live, and that's what's been happening in the last 20 years, especially the last several. Another potential factor could be the 2023-24 El Niño. It comes after three cooler La Niña phases in a row. BLOOMBERG world trusts us because there is no duplicity in us", Prime Minister Narendra Modi said on Friday while "we are not neutral... I will cooperate in every effort" for peace, be it between "Russia and Ukraine, Israel and Palestine". In a conversation with Zerodha co-founder Nikhil Kamath, Modi said India's standing in the world had increased because of its actions. "The world trusts us because there is no duplicity in us. What we say is clear. We repeatedly said we are not neutral. I am in favour of peace, and I will cooperate in every effort for it. I tell this to Russia and Ukraine, Israel and Palestine. Our credibility has increased because of this.Theworld thinks that India says what it believes." "In Abu Dhabi, when I wanted a temple for Hindus, I got it from the Crown Prince in a moment. What a happy moment this was for crores of Hindus," he said. He recalled how Chinese President Xi Jinping once told him that they shared a "special connection". He said when he became PM in 2014, "President Xi, during a courtesy call, said to me he wished to come to India, travel to Guiarat, Vadnagar in particular. I said he was most welcome. He said we share a special connection." Modi quoted Xi as telling him that the Chinese scholar Hiuen Tsang, when he travelled to India, stayed for long in his village Vadnagar and in Xi's village when he returned to China.

For the first time in several years, he spoke of the Godhra train burning incident and the criticism that followed the Gujarat riots in 2002. Responding to a question on how he dealt with anxiety, he recalled the 2002 incidents. "On February 24, 2002, I first became MLA. On February 27, I went to the (Gujarat) Assembly for the first time. Within three days as MLA, news came of the Godhra carnage. I said I want to go to Godhra, taking a helicopter from Baroda. There was just a single-engine ONGC helicopter available at that time. They refused, saying a VIP cannot be flown in a single-engine helicopter. I said I would give an undertaking in writing that I was willingly taking the risk. I took the helicopter to Godhra, and saw the bodies. I felt restless but I knew that in my post (as CM), I had to control myself and rise above emotions."

He also mentioned how he was denied a visa to the US after the Guiarat riots. "I was an elected CM, and the US refused to give me a visa. I felt this was an insult to the country and an elected govt, just because some people spread some lies. I addressed a press conference that day and said I want an India where the world will stand in a queue for our visa. I can see the time now is India's," he said. Modi said while ideology had a place in politics, idealism was far more important. The mission, he said, could be the same even if the paths taken are different. In this context, he cited the examples of Gandhi and VD Savarkar. "My tagline is nation first. I dowhatever fits it, without getting bound by ideology or traditions. I am willing to leave old things and accept new ones. But I never change the benchmark. It remains nation first," he said. More than ideology, idealism matters. Before independence, freedom was the ideology. Gandhi's path and Savarkar's were different, but both wanted freedom," he said. Modi accepted that he too might have committed mistakes, but that he never had any wrong intention. "Main bhi manushya hi hoon, koi devata thode hi na hoon (I am also human, I am not a god)."
